ABSTRACT

Statistical data and a descriptive summary of the data on faculty contracts and bargaining agents are presented. The following information is provided for colleges listed by state: number of campuses, type of college, size of bargaining unit for 1977-78, the current bargaining agent, the year the current agent was elected, the year the initial contract was signed, and the expiration date of the current contract. A list of colleges voting no agent, and a summary list of elections for 1978 are presented. Statistics are given on agents and contracts for specific unions, and data are provided for private and public colleges. Information is also presented on the status of state collective bargaining legislation. An alphabetical list of colleges and universities is included. It is shown that a total of 382 bargaining agents have been elected, with public colleges accounting for 302 and private colleges, 80; 119 for four-year universities, and 251, two-year. (SW)

INTRODUCTION

UNIONIZATION AMONG FACULTY - 1978

In the nation's higher education institutions 382 bargaining agents have been elected. Public institutions account for 302, private colleges 80; 119 are four-year universities, and 251 two-year. Unionization has occurred at 8 law schools and 4 medical schools. Of the country's 3,000 campuses and 665,000 faculty, more than 600 campuses and 130,000 faculty and professional staff have been unionized, and more than 300 bargaining agreements have been signed.

Although "new election" movement has slowed considerably since the advent of higher education collective bargaining, activity in the related areas of grievance/arbitration, strikes, contracts and settlements, and judicial and administrative decisions indicates that collective bargaining is still a force with considerable impact on higher education institutions. Legislative and court decisions of note have occurred during the past year. The "Yeshiva" judicial decision that classified faculty as managerial personnel, and thus not a body that the university must bargain with, has the potential for major repercussions in the private sector. Important enabling legislation was passed in California -- marking the beginning of a new phase of organizing among four-year institutions in that state for the coming year.

During 1978, 20 new bargaining agents were elected for the first time, and 20 elections were held at institutions that had already previously chosen bargaining agents. Five institutions rejected bargaining altogether and one rejected a decertification attempt at Palm Beach Junior College, Fla. A similar effort at Keene State College, N.H. was also defeated in early 1979.

Of the 20 first-time elections, 5 were in four-year private institutions, and 15 were in public institutions--7 two-year, 13 four-year. The state of California led in organizing activity with the unionization of five two-year institutions (Butte College, Chabot College, Marin Community College, San Francisco Community College, Santa Monica Community College). Other states represented in first-time elections were Arizona where Pima Community College became the first higher education institution in the state to conduct representation elections; Connecticut with Post College, a private four-year university; and the University of Connecticut Health Center where non-teaching professionals organized. The election at the University of the District of Columbia was an offshoot of the consolidation of 3 institutions in 1977. The University of Maine elected a bargaining agent, as did Lake Superior College in Michigan, and the University of Montana which has previously rejected bargaining voted for it. In New York State 3 private institutions held elections: Long Island University-Brooklyn Center elected a bargaining agent for the College of Pharmacy on a separate campus; and Long Island University-C.W. Post Center adjunct faculty held elections, as did Ithaca College's full-time faculty. Faculty at Lakeland Community College, Ohio organized and in Oregon, Portland State University elected two bargaining agents -- for full-time and adjunct faculty members. The Rhode Island School of Design, a private four-year college, organized, as did the South Dakota Board of Regents System.

Bargaining was rejected in California at North Orange Community College, at Michigan State University for the second time, at the University of Minnesota, Montana State University, and at Pace University, N. Y., the only private institution in this group.

(Note: The total number of agents in this year's Directory (382), as compared to last year's (343), reflects an increase of 39, rather than 20. This discrepancy is due to revised information received from institutions.)

Most of the cases of second or third-time elections occurred in the State of New York where the Associated Community College Faculties disbanded as an independent union and individual locals voted to affiliate with other unions, 13 with NEA and 1 with AFT.

In a significant election at the State University of New York, the United University Professions (an affiliate of AFT) won the right to continue representing faculty and non-teaching professionals against their major opponent, NYEA, an affiliate of NEA. An interesting side issue was the question raised by the State of New York at a PERB hearing as to whether interns and residents at the State University should belong to a union. This is another development in the continuing attempt to resolve the issue of the bargaining status of interns and residents, and comes at a time when Congress is moving to give house staff the right to bargain collectively.

Legislation

The absence or passage of enabling legislation to give collective bargaining rights to faculty continues to be a prime factor in the level of organizing acitivity. There was only one significant legislative event this year and that took place in California.

California: Collective bargaining rights have been granted to 90,000 academic and non-academic members of California's public four-year colleges and universities (University of California, Hastings School of Law, and California State University and College System). The new law takes effect July 1, 1979.

Colorado: In a referendum sponsored by the faculty council, the University of Colorado faculty rejected collective bargaining. The Board of Regents rescinded a commitment to encourage collective bargaining. Since Colorado has no enabling legislation for faculty collective bargaining, this decision will probably be important.

Maryland: Despite a ruling by the Attorney General that precludes faculty bargaining in the absence of enabling legislation, the General Assembly passed a special bill to enable faculty at Montgomery College to choose a bargaining agent.

Massachusetts: A new "coordinated bargaining" system for faculty of Massachusetts higher education institutions was put into effect. Economic matters are bargained by the State Office of Employee Relations and non-economic matters by individual boards of trustees.

New York: Public employees engaged in illegal strikes are no longer subject to probation and tenure loss penalties as the result of a bill passed by the state legislature.

Tennessee: Legislation was enacted to grant bargaining rights to elementary and secondary school teachers. This may be the forerunner of further educational legislation relevant to higher education.

Washington: Public four-year colleges and universities may bargain with faculty but are not obligated to do so, according to a ruling of the Washington State Court in the Eastern Washington University dispute. University trustees had maintained they lacked authority to bargain because no state bargaining law for faculty exists for four-year institutions.

Wisconsin: The University of Wisconsin Board of Regents voted to oppose any collective bargaining legislation for university faculty after bills were rejected by a State Senate committee in 1977. Legislation exists for two-year institutions.
